Developing my automation skills

Hey,

I have recently got my first job as an automaton tester, I am fairly ok at selenium and cypress. But I want to become a more rounded automation tester, so am looking for recommendations for tools to learn or courses to take to help me develop.

Any suggestions greatly appreciated 😊

Looking for a tool to auto fill in fields on pages

Hi,

I have to test a lot of different scenario's. To get to a scenario i have to fill in a form with like 30+ fields. And there are like 25 different forms so yeah..

Now i just manually fill in each field. Which takes a lot of time. Is there a tool where i can just fill in each form with pre-entered data.

For example

1: Form 1 (Field 1 = A, Field 2 = B. Field 3 = C)

2: Form 1 (Field 1 = A, Field 2 = E. Field 3 = F)

How to test input/output

this goes for methods handling input and output as well. Our project is essentially the user typing in a specific command in stdin and our program will do specific actions depending on the command. I was wondering how I can write tests for the methods that read in the input. Thank you so much!

Hi everyone need input if there is a better way to structure my test cases(to reduce them)

I just need your input on how to structure the test cases for one scenario w.r.t to a Boolean table or if there are any other ways that can help me reduce the test cases with max coverage or if my table is correct
I have to show an alert to a user. if A and B are true, but the twist is with B (B: u click a button u get 5 options out of that 5 options, B is true only if you select particular 2 options for other 3 it's false and also u can only select one. So A should be true and one of 2 options among the 5 in B then an alert is sent I tried to make a table could you please suggest any inputs. Thank you

Test Automation for OSX applications

Hello, everyone! Does anyone have any recommendations for tools/libraries used for automating tests for macOS applications?

I've only worked with pyatom/atomac (https://github.com/pyatom/pyatom) in the past and I'm looking to try something different.

What did you do to stand out to potential employers when applying to your very first testing job? Did you have certifications listed in your resume or did you show a GITHUB project?

Software testers with non-IT background or with no prior experience in IT before starting your first testing job, please share your valuable thoughts.

Are TAU (Test Automation University) certifications recognised in the software testing industry?

Software testers who actually work in the industry - can you shed some light on this? If TAU's certifications are not recognized, then what should a budding QA Automation Engineer like me do to be an interesting candidate to

API chain test with TestNG & RestAssured

Hi,

I am currently using TestNG & Rest Assured for our API test automation. I'm trying to figure out what is the correct approach for chain testing multiple API's?

Example:

- Create new user
- Load data created user.
- Delete user.

I am able to individually run load & delete user with older tests data and manually entering the unique ID in a DataProvider, but now I would like to be able to run these test in a chain format.

How are you guys running your E2E tests in CI?

We are looking to put them into github actions. I'm not sure if they should run pre deployment or post deployment. Also, does your test code live in the same repo as the app, or a different repo?

Curious to see how others are doing it.

Finishing up my sdet bootcamp

Hi everyone , I have around 2 months of my sdet bootcamp left … it was a 8 month program … I learned about sdlc, scrum , agile , waterfall … sql search queuries … manual testing … Java(selenium, cucumber, bdd), frameworks … and much more I can't think of right now … it was so much information to learn in so little time . I just wanna know if it's ok to feel a little overwhelmed, and possibly still feel not ready to go in the real workforce ? We'll I have time to learn on the job more ? The next 2 months we are going to be finishing up creating frameworks and learning about interviews and how to answer questions . I hope I'm not missing anything

Is testing a server endpoint E2E or Integration?

In your opinion testing a server endpoint, let say for example a NodeJS server, using a library like Supertest falls in which category of testing: End-to-End or Integration?

So far, this would be an E2E test in my mind, but I recently took a course on TDD called JavaScript: Test-Driven Development (ES6) on LinkedIn Learning and there the author refers to this type of test as Integration Test.

Cypress controlled browser certificate issue

My tests could not in our prod env due to certificate issue. On headless mode it is running with no issues but if i want to run the tests individually using test runner I am getting https error and tests could not start. Chrome websecurity : false but doesn't seem to work. Any idea what could be the reason?

Being the QA person on a project that's still early in development

I recently started a new position as part of a team that is building a new product from the ground up. As you can imagine there's not much testing for me to do. As it is the developers are figuring out how the features work. As a tester, I try to offer feedback on processes and try to advocate for QA needs, but I also don't want to feel like I'm pulling others away from their tasks, especially when they're trying to get the basics of this application working.

How do contribute as the QA team member with nothing to test? I'm trying to build an automation framework as the UI components are added but that feels like a waste since the UI will likely change as we get feedback from customers. And even then that doesn't take long.

[Questions/Seeking Advise] Onboarding new QA team members and how to set them up for success

I work for a startup that was recently acquired by a much larger company (we will be maintaining ourselves as an "independent" company or rather a department of the acquiring company. In other words, we get more money, but we still control how its spent more or less). We are going to be scaling up our team in all ways including more QA engineers. At this point, I am the most senior person on the QA team, but I'm still very much learning my role and do not have any experience in managing and onboarding new team members. Currently I have an interim QA manager whose actually a member of the dev team. This dev has 20+ years of software industry experience and has worked with QA teams in the past. He is providing me guidance, but simply cannot handle all of the heavy lifting while also keeping up with his work load. He has asked me to start putting together documentation on what I do in a given day. I don't have a formal process. I have things I do, but honestly don't have a good strategic flow to my work. I don't necessarily want help on how to tell people what I do since I'm the only one that knows that. I'm looking for some insight on what information is generally the most helpful to new hires. Again, I've been a new hire, but honestly every time I've started a new role at a new company it's been pretty sparse because I'm generally being brought on as the 1st QA that the company has ever hired, thus Ive never had a true in depth QA engineer onboarding anywhere Ive

Portfolio examples

I'm looking for my first job in automation and I'm working on my portfolio and I'm a little confused of what exactly I should be striving for.

I'd be very grateful if people could share projects of portfolios that helped them in their job search.
